The Real Deal, Apr 10th, 2004

Reviewed By: sunsetbrew

I have a company that organizes volunteers accross the country and even overseas. Until I tried this tool, I had been using a message board which simply was not meeting our needs. I spent weeks looking for a good program to help us out. I finally gave this a try and it has been excellent from the start. It take getting use use to, but it is worth the effort.

I can't wait to see where this project goes from here. I hope the group working on it continues their fine work!

My wife, my parents, my four siblings, and my siblings' 17 children are planning a trip to Mexico next year. Dotproject is working splendidly for this purpose! Also, it helps with getting web development projects done on time and within budget.

Excellent Project Management, Dec 7th, 2005

Hopefully this won't be rejected again because in my previous review, I simply stated that I've tried other open-source project management software and none have compared to this one. It's not perfect, but it's very good. Hopefully, it will keep getting better.

Not very intuitive, Sep 4th, 2007

We found this program was hardly intuitive in it's design. But it's free. It was difficult to correct problems and manage the projects. But it's free.

All in all it had potential, but there's a reason it's free - be prepared for a lot of work to make it work.
